Teaching & Facilitating with Neurodiversity in Mind

with Kate Klein

In this hands-on workshop, we will explore some essential things to keep in mind when teaching towards learner complexity and neurodiversity.

By the end of this workshop, you will:

1. Be familiar with a Universal Design for Learning framework of education and acquainted with useful UDL resources to support your facilitation practice.
2. Understand how to approach facilitating towards neurodiversity as a "life-long learner" with needs of your own, rather than as a perfectionist.
3. Have new strategies for: Building choice into your facilitation practice; Taking a second look at commonly-held ideas of normal; and Becoming a safe place for feedback and suggestions for adaptation.
